

The International Society for Immunonutrition (ISIN) is a non-profit organization created with the objective of promoting education and research in the interdisciplinary area that includes the interaction between nutrition and immunology. It creates knowledge through the advancement of the field's understanding, as well as the publication and communication of its discoveries.

ISIN was established for the public benefit of advanced research and education in the science of Immunonutrition. Since its creation it has facilitated learning among nutritionists in general and among European nutritionists in particular, by holding meetings, discussions, exchanging information and other appropriate means. ISIN also works constantly towards the promotion of the importance of nutrition in European and international health policies and research programs.

The Society has more than 100 scientific partners and is supported by the most important companies in the sector.
